From a review of the literature, it is evident that the majority of studies have focused on the effects of the intervention on the children's behavior. However, the effects on the parents' behavior and the family environment have not been thoroughly investigated. The present study aims to fill this gap by examining the effects of the intervention on the parents' behavior and the family environment.

1. The first group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the researchers themselves. They want to know how well the study was conducted and whether the results are reliable. This is important because if the study is not well conducted, the results may be unreliable and the researchers may not be able to draw any conclusions from them.
